BRAILLE HOUSE

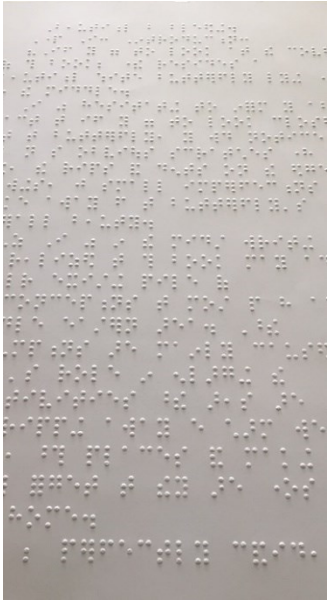
Newsletters

Important

Having a Braille Newsletter shows that people who are blind or have low vision are important to your business

Inclusive

When you hand your newsletter to someone, you want them to be able to read what is written



- More and more organisations are choosing to have braille on their newsletters so they can be easily contacted by clients who are blind or have low vision.
- Being inclusive is more than just words, it's braille too, and any organisation that has contact with people who may require braille should have a newsletter that reflects this.
- Governments and organisations that deal with disabilities should show a commitment to members of the community who are blind or have low vision.

Specifications:

A Word document is requested to be provided by the client, alternatively, if this option is not available, a PDF can be used but we may still be required to re-type some material.

Newsletters can be embossed either single sided or Interpoint (both sides) relevant to your requirements.
